Chapter 187: The Power of Creation

Above the Absolute Realm, the heavens themselves were adorned by the towering fortresses of the Divine Triad, whose influence stretched far and wide across the cosmos. Below them, two mighty castles of the Duo Dragons stood, their presence a testament to the incredible strength of the bloodline that flowed from Sung Su-Ho and Sung Jin-Woo. Beneath these, the seven castles of the Seven Dragons were constructed, each fortress a manifestation of their divine gifts and aspirations. Together, these castles formed an intricate hierarchy that represented the immense power and control of the Sung Dynasty.

The Gift of Creation: The Butler, Inner Worlds, and Guardians

In recognition of the Seven Dragons' status as divine beings, Sung Jin-Woo granted them extraordinary powers, allowing them to shape their personal realms and the guardians within them. This blessing transcended the limits of mere existence, bestowing upon them the ability to create entities that were bound to their will.

1. The Butler and Assistants:

Each of the Seven Dragons was granted the power to create their own butler, a being crafted from the essence of their will and infused with powers that reflected their respective attributes. These butlers were not mere servants; they were loyal, powerful entities capable of assisting in the governance and defense of their realms.

The butlers could summon lesser beings, command legions of shadow soldiers or elemental spirits, and even influence the very laws of reality within the confines of their master's domain. These assistants, though subordinate, were skilled in the art of diplomacy, combat, and the mystical arts, each attuned to the unique needs of their creator.

2. The Inner Worlds:

Each of the Seven Dragons was granted an inner world within their body-a realm where their essence could expand, and where they could build and cultivate life. These inner worlds were miniature universes, containing infinite possibilities and an array of divine creations. Within these realms, the Seven Dragons could shape entire landscapes, forge new entities, and manifest powerful beings born from their will.

It was within these inner worlds that the lesser Absolute Beings were born. These beings, though not as powerful as their divine creators, were imbued with a fraction of the Absolute Being's godly powers. They served as protectors, warriors, and aides, fulfilling roles that ranged from defending their master's castles to carrying out complex tasks within the inner worlds. Each lesser Absolute Being was a unique creation, designed to reflect their creator's desires and embody their aspirations.

3. Castle Guardians and Statues-Golems:

In addition to the inner worlds, each of the Seven Dragons was able to create castle guardians-beings of immense power and loyalty who stood watch over their fortresses. These guardians were physical embodiments of their creators' will, often taking the form of towering warriors, celestial beasts, or dragons imbued with cosmic energy.

Moreover, each of the castles had statues-golems, colossal entities made from enchanted materials that served as both symbols of their creator's power and as formidable defenders. These statues could be animated at will, springing to life when their castle was threatened. They were nearly indestructible, with power drawn directly from the castles themselves.

The Divine Hierarchy and Its Expanding Reach

With the creation of these personal realms, the butlers, guardians, and lesser Absolute Beings, the Seven Dragons solidified their dominion over their respective castles and their inner worlds. Their powers stretched far beyond their immediate surroundings, allowing them to influence and protect entire realms, and ensuring their legacy would endure through the ages.

The castles-Draconis Sanctum, Aetheris Dominion, Celestium Haven, Lunaris Asylum, Inferna Dominion, Mystica Enclave, and Tempest Keep-became not only fortresses of power but sacred sites where their creators' divine authority was affirmed and expanded.

Legacy of the Divine and Lesser Divine

As the Seven Dragons continued to grow in power and influence, their creations flourished. They became the new architects of the multiverse, shaping worlds within worlds and ruling over legions of beings that followed their divine commands. They were no longer mere heirs to the Sung Dynasty-they were gods in their own right, shaping the very fabric of existence as they saw fit.

And above them all, the Divine Triad-Sung Jin-Woo, Sung Su-Ho, and Ashborn-continued to reign supreme, their castles towering over all. The divine hierarchy was now fully established, and the multiverse trembled in awe of the power that resided within this celestial family.

The Sung Dynasty had transcended mortal realms and reached into the heart of the cosmos itself, ensuring that their reign would last for eternity.
